> Thank you for your interest in TripoSG and for providing details about your project.
>
> Based on our team's review of the publicly available license information, we can confirm the following:
> 1. Commercial Use: The MIT License permits commercial use, modification, and redistribution of the licensed materials, subject to its terms and conditions.
> 2. Additional License Requirements: Based on the publicly available license information, we did not find any indication that the TripoSG weights are additionally subject to the Tencent Hunyuan Community License.
> We appreciate your interest in integrating TripoSG into Makeo 3D and wish you success with your project!

> Hello,
> I am an independent developer in Israel building "Makeo 3D", an Android app that turns a photo into a 3D-printable model entirely on the phone (no server). I would like to offer TripoSG as an optional download inside the app, and later sell the app.
> What I do:
> I use the TripoSG weights published on Hugging Face under the MIT license, unchanged.
> I do not use your repository's model code. I wrote my own implementation that loads the weights.
> I convert the weights to the Qualcomm NPU format and host the converted files for download.
> The app shows the MIT notice and credits VAST-AI-Research.
> Could you please confirm that:
> this commercial use of the TripoSG weights is allowed under the MIT license, and > the weights carry no additional obligations from the Tencent Hunyuan Community License (which applies to parts of the original code)?
> Thank you very much for publishing TripoSG.
